

Since opening in 2004, eTime has quickly established itself as an innovative leader in the areas of teaching and learning.

Its focus is on 21st century skills such as digital literacy, effective communication, creative and logical thinking, entrepreneurship and high productivity.

During 2005, it had contracts with the Ministry of Education, New Zealand Trade and Enterprise, and individual schools in Canterbury and other parts of New Zealand and Australia.

In addition to its programmes for children, eTime is now the leading provider of ICT professional development for principals and teachers in Canterbury and is working currently with more than 50 schools locally, nationally and internationally.

The centre has a purpose-designed learning environment, where the latest information and communication technologies are integrated into all programmes seamlessly.

Those attending learn to appreciate how productive they can be given the right environment and technologies, how enjoyable it is to be fully engaged, and how effective they can be when working in a team. The eTime experience involves changing attitudes to learning by enabling teachers and children to become more motivated, more confident and more responsible for their own learning.

eTime is already at capacity in its current centre after only two years in business and, with the demand for its services growing rapidly, it has an exciting future.
